ACE Alumni -

As you enter your first year of post-secondary education, one of the most important things you can do as a student majoring in an ACE-related field is to join one or more of your school's student organizations. These organizations are a way for you to learn a great deal outside the classroom environment. In addition, student chapters such as AIAS typically offer discounted memberships.

Benefits of Involvement:

- Find other students who share your interests
- Provide leadership opportunities
- Network and build your resume
- Meet faculty in an informal setting
- Meet successful professionals already employed in your field
- Learn practical information about your major
- Participate in service activities with and outside the school
- Attend industry-specific conferences
- Apply and receive additional scholarships

Visit your school's website to see what student organization chapters are available, and be on the lookout for your school's fall activity fair to see how you can get involved!

ACE-related Student Organizations

- American Institute of Architects Students (AIAS)
- National Organization of Minority Architects (NOMA)
- American Society of Civil Engineers (ASCE)
- National Society of Professional Engineers (NSPE)
- American Academy of Environmental Engineers (AAEE)
- Society of Women Engineers (SWE)
- National Society of Black Engineers (NSBE)
- American Society of Interior Designers (ASID)
